Theory and History

Date

4 - 7 June 2018

Duration

4 days

Contents

Hate incidents and hate crimes are an everyday feature of the lives of some people and occur in ordinary, everyday circumstances. For some, persistent harassment and abuse may be an ongoing aspect of day-to-day existence. The main aspect of selection is what kind of group belongs the assaulted person to, if she or he member of a minority group, which different from the offenders' group considering race, ethnicity, national origin, religion, disability, or sexual orientation, she or he will be very likely a victim. It is crucial to highlight the actuality of studying hate crime. e.g. the challenges of a multicultural society vs. a society with emerging minority groups. Focusing on a collection of the competencies (fairness, respect, tolerance) and how they can be achieved. Differentiating between an "average" hostile attack or a racially motivated one. The ways the police should treat the victims and perpetrators of hate crimes.

Objectives

14 hours of lectures and 14 hours of practical seminars.
